Milwaukee, like Chicago, is rapidly progress ing. In fact, it is the commercial capital of

ing. In fact, it is the commercial capital of Wisconsin and has a population of nearly Milwauken Rivers, It has an area of some seventeen miles square and boasts of one hundred and sixty streets, with nearly fifteen thousand dwellings divided into nine wards. A large proportion of the population consists of Germans, who give the city a distinctive character and appearance and are possessed of a trait of character which is well known in ountry villages of the East, being well posted upon each others' names and business, Yet, situal, they are a smart, energetic, thoroughgoing business people.

A peculiarity of this city is the color of the brick used in the building of houses, which differ materially from those elsewhere, being of a creamy-white color, instead of red. Milwaukee is sometimes alluded to, on this socount, as the "Cream City of the bakes." It contains many very handsome public buildings, as well as private residences, and has also many tries to boast of a filthy stream of water, but Milwaukee, I think, "takes the cake." The River extends about two miles inland and, like building, far outrival Chicago and New York. The river is navigable for vessels of 1500 tons burden, so I am informed, moored at the very door-ways of the newest and finest warehouses, and their gangways lead conveniently nto the best markets. The manufacturing are numerous. At this time I will not undertake to enumerate them all but will speak only of one-the principal, namely, lager beer, which to all intents and purposes seems to be the alpha and omega of Milwankee's industry, if such it may be called. Immense brick breweries, cantelous beer gardens and saloous abound, but strange to say, the beer-drinkers of Milwaukee are church-goers and support sixty religious edifices of various denominations, beside Sodgers pits.
